

Change of Heart

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright by Melrose Newspaper Syndicate, Inc.)

"MADGE dear," "Walter," "That was the way they began. After a separation of four months Madge had written to Walter and told him that she would be glad to have him call that Saturday afternoon, and she had anticipated the little interview under the grape arbor beside her father's country house with a tenderness that somehow seemed to leave her, now that she actually saw the slender young man approach her with outstretched hands.

"I wanted to tell you, Walter—don't," she said, preventing him to take her hands gently in his as they sat down together on the bench under the arbor. "I've changed my mind entirely—about what a girl ought to do. I didn't of you know because I wanted to be sure, and I wanted to surprise you."

"But Madge, dear," said the young man, "you're perhaps entirely right. I've been thinking things over myself. I realize that conditions are not what they were when our mothers were young. My cousin has been spending the summer with us. Martin Stone—I know you'd like her and I have told her of about you. She has been an angel. But in those days a girl was the girl for whom—well, or she was to devote herself to domestic matters or follow some career that she's not better suited for."

Madge bowed up and smiled at the young man continued. "The fact is, Madge, dear, that Martin somehow put the matter on a different basis. I know you and she will be great friends. She herself says 'that if she ever marries she will continue her music teaching.'"

Madge just sat and looked at Walter and felt the gentle pressure of his hand on hers without a bit of the thrill that she had expected. Six months ago when they saw each other for the last time they had come to a serious disagreement. They were making plans for an autumn wedding, and Madge had declared that she never intended to do any sort of housework. She had put her appointment as a high school teacher and she liked the work. Walter had protested—Walter who was ordinarily quite mild of manner but actually became quite angry. The engagement had not been actually broken, but Madge had gone off to visit an aunt and they had arranged between themselves not even to write for six months. They would think matters over in the meantime.

So Madge had come to alter her mind. Still, however, her appointment as a high school teacher and her aunt's husband, who had before many years ago passed she told Tom of her conviction.

"I don't know your Walter in the least," Tom had said. "I'd never want to marry a girl who wouldn't take an interest in her own home. If a girl didn't care enough for me to be willing to do that I wouldn't think she cared enough for me to marry me."

After that Madge registered in a school of domestic science and before another week had passed she was deeply interested in dietetics, cooking, household administration and was taking a course in dressmaking besides.

And here she was—Madge with Walter—waiting to tell him the good surprise—and Walter was in no great hurry to hear.

"So you see we really have my cousin Martha to thank," Walter was saying. "She showed me how absurd it would be for you—when you might be earning several thousand dollars a year even to start with—to be wasting your time on housework."

"She even suggested taking apartments—then we would both be quite free and we could get around out and not bother keeping any maid. Martha has such good ideas about marriage. She says she thinks most of the divorcees nowadays are due to the fact that people don't really—"

Walter went on but Madge did not hear him. She was thinking of Tom that evening she left her aunt's. He had held her hand in a close grasp for a minute, then raising it to his forehead he had kissed it and let it drop.

"Of course I want you to marry me Walter if he can make you happy," he said. "But he can't possibly love you more than I do."

"I think I could make Tom happier than I could you," Madge told Walter. "And of course there's your cousin Martha." He was wondering as he glanced at her whether it would be too small for Martha.

Severe heat in western potato growing states, which carries with it the possibilities for better prices for the Maine potatoes, has increased the interest of Maine growers in the round table discussion to be held in connection with the American Institute of Cooperation meeting in Durham, N. H., Aug. 2-5, according to Maurice D. Jones of the College of Agriculture. "Maine growers are interested," Professor Jones says, "because the heads of the largest potato marketing and distributing organizations in the country will be represented at the meeting which comes to New England for the first time in the history of the Institute."

FARM BUREAU NEWS

A long list of speakers are under consideration by members of the Pomona Grange and Farm Bureau Field Day committee from which it is hoped an early announcement can be made of speakers for the Songo Pond Field Day, Bethel. The date of the field day has been previously announced as Saturday, August 20.

Some dairymen are considering pasturing their second crop or "rowen" after the first hay crop is removed from their fields. This practice seems worthy of recommendation since it does not shorten the winter's supply of hay and at the same time, provides the equivalent to good June pasture at a time when old pastures are drying up. There are many arguments in favor of fencing and concentrated grazing to prevent grass from getting too hard and unpalatable with resulting waste. The cows can then be rotated to other similar plots, giving the preceding plot a rest. Let the cows do the haying. They will get more hay and get it when it will make the most milk.

In connection with woodlot improvement and the establishment of woodlot improvement demonstration plots, the County Agent reports a fairly good distribution of such plots over the county. There are some areas however, that will be considered especially in locating demonstration areas for another year. These will include, Oxford, Brownfield, Lovell, Sweden, Norway, Dixfield, North Norway and Hibernia.

Any farmers or foresters in these towns who would like to discuss the various phases of woodlot improvement such as thinning, weeding, improvement, cutting and pruning, please drop a card to your County Agent, D. H. Ridley, at South Paris.

A Better Blueberry contest under the supervision of the Maine Experiment Station is underway in which money prizes will be given to those sending in the best specimens of blueberries. A single bunch is all that is needed and may be either from a low bush or high bush species. Your County Agent has jars complete with formaldehyde solution for holding the sample. Write for complete information.

"Rose bugs" have been reported doing some damage to beans and young apple trees. This destructive, chewing insect is difficult to kill. It is believed that arsenate of lead poison can be made much more effective against them if enough molasses is added to sweeten the spray mixture.

Forty milk sample mailing kits are being sent out for the first time on Monday, July 25 by the new Dairy Record Club recently formed. Plans are now being made for a meeting of the forty dairy members sometime during the month of August.

Carroll R. DeCoster, a Norway poultryman and president of the Oxford County Poultry Improvement Association, has called a meeting of that body for Wednesday evening, July 27, 7:00 P. M., Standard Time at the Farm Bureau Office, South Paris. Matters under discussion will include (1) a flock certification plan for Maine, (2) an advertising plan for developing interest in Maine poultry stock, (3) the Summer Poultry School, H. L. Richardson, Extension Poultry Specialist will be speaker of the evening.

Potato Disease meetings have been held in the communities of B. Bethel, Bethel, So. Paris, Denmark, Brownfield, Upton, Fryeburg, So. Paris, Sumner, Norway and Oxford. Seventy-four farmers have attended these meetings. The interest has been keen at all meetings. When the various diseases are pointed out it is easy to see why many potato fields look sick and irregular, while others look vigorous, green and even. A. K. Gardner, Poultry Specialist will be present at the meetings in Andover, North Ramford, North Lovell and Waterford.

The "Arrangement of Cut Flowers" was the topic discussed by Miss Edna Cobb, Home Management Specialist of the University of Maine at the South Paris Grange Hall. Farm Bureau leaders from all over the county came for this training. Each in turn will go back to her own community and pass on what she learned, to the local Farm Bureau group. Representatives were present from East Bethel, Canton Point, Canton, North Ramford, Buckfield, East Peru, West Peru, Peru, Middle Intervale, Mexico, Norway, South Paris, Bryant Pond, Roxbury, Bethel, Waterford and North Paris.

"Keep your arrangements simple," says Miss Cobb, "and your results are likely to be pleasing." The simple vases are always the best. The container should serve to emphasize the flowers and not attract the eye to itself. Dried beet or pickle jars of plain glass are often better as flower receptacles than expensive vases.

NATIONAL 4-H CLUB RADIO BROADCAST

On August 6, 1932-12:30 to 1:30 P. M., Eastern Standard Time, the National 4-H Club radio program will feature talks concerning the activities of farm boys' and girls' club members that have some economic or practical value. Extension work in farm economics including adjustments in farm operations to meet changing conditions and the keeping of business records of the farm to determine the most productive commodities, has become well established for adult farmers. That this type of Extension teaching also has considerable value in 4-H work will be discussed in a talk entitled "Farm Economics Help Older Club Members," to be given by James K. Harris, a 4-H club member of 10 years' standing in Ohio.

The National 4-H music achievement list will be broadcast at this time. Club members will be asked to identify for their own information the music played by the U. S. Marine Band.

The "Arrangement of Cut Flowers" was the topic discussed by Miss Edna Cobb, Home Management Specialist of the University of Maine at the South Paris Grange Hall. Farm Bureau leaders from all over the county came for this training. Each in turn will go back to her own community and pass on what she learned, to the local Farm Bureau group. Representatives were present from East Bethel, Canton Point, Canton, North Ramford, Buckfield, East Peru, West Peru, Peru, Middle Intervale, Mexico, Norway, South Paris, Bryant Pond, Roxbury, Bethel, Waterford and North Paris.

"Keep your arrangements simple," says Miss Cobb, "and your results are likely to be pleasing." The simple vases are always the best. The container should serve to emphasize the flowers and not attract the eye to itself. Dried beet or pickle jars of plain glass are often better as flower receptacles than expensive vases.

A CLUB BOY'S PHILOSOPHY

'Tis a grand old place—this farm of ours,
With meadows wide and shady bowers.
The corn stands ripening row on row,
Dad's field and mine—both you know,
Planted just right the 4-H way—
Who says that club work doesn't pay?

Why should I stray from the farm away,
To spend my life in the city gray?
In raising calves I take delight,
Because I've learned to do it right,
There's only one method—the 4-H way—
Who says that club work doesn't pay?

There's a lot on our farm to be proud of, indeed;
We have purebred stock and pedigreed seed,
By following the advice of our college, you see,
We are in business together—Dad and me—
Who says that club work doesn't pay?

ELYN ACTION glanced quickly around to see whether any of the men were watching, then deftly rolled two rolls from her gay little leather handbag and put them on the table beside her cup of steaming coffee. In this very glorious she was only 20 cents and it gave her a feeling of prosperity to break with the successful business men women of the town.

This morning, however, she was depressed because for three solid days she had been hunting a position without success and her funds were reduced to small change and a mere meal was only a nagging memory to her. She looked wistfully at the piece of fried ham that lay on the next table and crinkled her little nose as its fragrance came invitingly to her. It seemed to tease her and she ate the tiny rolls drier in her mouth. After she had finished she did strange things. As she rose from the table she opened her purse, took out a small piece of paper, then sat down at the ham table. As she scribbled aimless words she noticed that there was a clean spoon beside the plate and the knife had only been used for cutting, so she was afraid of it. She took it up and she said to herself, "I am not going to eat this ham." She looked at the ham and she said to herself, "I am not going to eat this ham." She looked at the ham and she said to herself, "I am not going to eat this ham."

"Tudor, madam, permit me to repeat this and you will have more to write," the man said. "The ham was whisked away and the spoon and the knife that had been used for cutting, but out of the heels of disappointment came a sense of escape; if that waiter had not been at that moment he would have been eating the other patron's breakfast."

"Making your way in a big city isn't bad," she reflected, "until you lose your position, and then—"

poignant weakness rushed over her as she thought of the little home town she loved and of Jack Dalton who had asked to marry her and whom she had so flatly refused.

"All right," he had said with a smile. "When you get through with your career you can come to me."

That was four years ago. With a sense of impatience she pulled herself together and walked swiftly along. "You want to impress people," she thought. "You have to hold your head up when you wear a $5 dress."

She looked down at the $5 dress she wore and she said to herself, "I want to look like a $75 French fashion." So she walked jauntily down the street, her disappointment already beginning to sear her.

She was a beautiful thing about a coffee and a breakfast; it had a way of playing hide and seek, it was gone and you had yourself all wish washy and such.

"Now, let's see, where's that old man?" she went on. "Yes, 740 Elm street building. The Weaver Tire company. They said to call at ten o'clock. Its three blocks down and across. I'll just about get there on time. Wonder how many others they're to call, too. But my letter was good one if I say it—maybe they'll like me."

And the big building swallowed her. She left the elevator at the seventh floor and turned the knob of the door leading to suite 746.

"You wanted a stenographer?" she said to the man at the high desk. "Yes, please step this way, Miss Dalton."

He showed her to the office door, opened it and returned to his desk. As she entered the man inside turned to face her, then he rose and took both her hands in his.

"Evelyn," he said gently as the girl started at him, her face suddenly flushed, then she recovered herself and greeted him flippantly enough. "Same old Jack Dalton," she laughed. "You look like a million dollars," he said surveying her. "Let's get out of here where we can talk."

Like an automaton, she followed him out of the office and they went to a restaurant nearby.

A FEW MOMENTS WITH THE POETS

IF KIPLING HAD WRITTEN IT LIKE THIS

If you can see what some folk call "depression" As nothing but a spin of Fortune's wheel; If you can keep your poise and self-possession No matter what you think or how you feel; If you can view a stupid situation All cluttered up with "ifs" and "awe" and "buts" And take it at its proper valuation— A challenge to your common sense and guts; If you can rise above the mess and muddle, If you can glimpse a rainbow through the clouds; If Doubt and Dread and Fear are in a huddle And Hope is being measured for a crowd; If you can keep a saving sense of humor For stories that are slightly inexact; If you can disregard Report and Rumor, And not accept a statement as a fact; If you can spread the gospel of successes, If you can stir the spirit that instills The latent life in lathes and looms and presses And lifts the stream above a thousand mills; If briefly you can spend an extra dollar; If you can pry the sacred Roll apart And buy another shirt on shoe or collar; If you can act as if it didn't break your heart; If you have faith in those with whom you labor, And trust in those with whom you make a trade; If you believe in friend and next door neighbor And heed examples pioneers have made; If you expect the sun to rise tomorrow; If you are sure that somewhere "things are blue" And up and pack away the futile; If better days are largely up to YOU!" —Author Unknown

HIS MAJESTY, THE CAT

Leroy F. Jackson
We were down at Missus Blair's
She had a lot of golden chairs,
On a velvet cushion sat
His Gracious Majesty, the Cat.
And a man to bring him meat,
And a maid to wash his feet,
And to mind what they were at,
Was His Majesty, the Cat.
"Look here," he cried with lifted paw,
"I don't like my liver raw;
And I don't, and that is that,"
Said His Majesty, the Cat.
"He was polished tooth and nail,
With ribbons 'round his neck and tail,
And every one must praise his hat
To His Majesty, the Cat.
"Billie Bill, he went with me,
And he's as smart as can be;
Billie Bill, he just said, 'Scat,'
To His Majesty, the Cat."

YOUR DOG

Jeanette Norland
Do never scolds when things go wrong,
Do senses when its sob or song,
Do's always there to go along?
Your dog.
Do watches every word you say,
Do knows just when you want to play,
Do whom you never can repay?
Your dog.
Do understands your every whim,
Do knows just what you say to him,
Do mood is yours when gay or grim?
Your dog.
Do can man find a better friend?
Do will stand by him till the end,
Do matter where his footsteps wend?
His dog.

MEMOIRS OF THE OLD SONGO SCHOOLHOUSE, ALBANY, MAINE

Mrs. Caroline L. Cole
Have you heard the tidings, schoolmates?
Years friends of long ago?
Listen, while I tell you,
And you'll grieve with me I know.
The dear old Songo schoolhouse,
Where in youth we loved to meet,
No longer again re-echo,
The sound of noisy feet.
The light and news reached me,
And tears ran down like rain,
For I knew the dear old schoolhouse,
Should never see again.
Was not so very ancient,
And its timbers all were sound,
Tough wantonly disfigured,
And by time and tempest browned.
In these days of progress,
Years roll on apace,
The hands remove all landmarks,
While we grieve with tear wet face.
This old red schoolhouse,
Some three score years or more,
Many farthings distant
From Songo's sandy shore.
Looking southward from its windows,
Through the pine woods standing Near,
Could be seen the mossy grave-yard,
Where are resting schoolmates dear.

Whom cruel death relentless,
In its grasp had seized,
And torn them from our number,
And cared not that we grieved.

But comes this thought to comfort
And console us while we weep,
There, they are free from pain and Sorrow,
And naught disturbs their sleep.

Sleep on! dear dark eyed Julia,
In thy mossy grave so green,
And Hannah, with the blue eyes,
Thy rest is sweet, I ween!

When Gabriel's trumpet sounding,
Shall echo through the air,
Reaching earth's remotest regions,
I hope to meet you there.

Old schoolhouse, worn and time
brown,
Now demolished and laid low,
You bring saddened recollections,
Of the days of long ago.

'Twas there, on my teacher leaning,
When a little child of three,
With her kindly arms around me,
I learned my A B C.

And tonight methinks I see her,
As then a fair, young girl,
Her sweet face framed most charming
In a mass of jetty curls.

She will never be forgotten,
At her name my bosom swells,
Martha Brown! Oh! speak it softly,
For in heaven now she dwells.

And I see once more my schoolmates,
Their voices again I hear,
With mirth and laughter ringing
Through that school-room, loved so dear.

On the green, again we're playing,
Neath the blue of a summer sky,
And o'er rocks lightly springing
In the brooklet rippling by.

But when the summer ended,
And the winter with its snow
Had hidden our grassy playground,
And checked the brooklet's flow.

There, in that cherished schoolroom,
The fires burning bright,
Wintry blasts were scarcely heeded,
With hearts so warm and light.

In our linsey-woolsey, dresses,
The boys in homespun grey,
Without the winds might whistle,
We were happy, blithe and gay.

To teach that school in winter,
A "master" always came,
With rod and rule to frighten,
And mischievous ones to tame.

"Birch rule" so said our elders,
Some forty years ago,
"Is that the thing for the Songo boys,
I'd hev them for tu know."

But it wasn't every "master,"
Who cared to apply that rule,
For they were sturdy fellows,
Who then attended school.

But those veterans of "yo olden time,"
With sayings quaint and droll,
Didn't believe in "moral suasion,"
For the boys of the Songo school.

And as they "alred" their wisdom,
With knowing winks and sly,
"The Songo Boys" their counsils kept,
But "winked the other eye."

There were "Syd" and "Jack" and
"Wallace,"
And "Jesse" and "Walt" and "Fat,"
Who, not for John L. in his glory,
Would have deigned to doff their hat.

They were muscular, strong and stalwart,
Those boys of Songo fame,
Although not "up" in science,
They could "get there" just the same.

And when some smooth faced strip-
pling,
With self important air,
Dressed in the latest fashion,
With oiled and shining hair.

Came "strutting" through the schoolroom,
With "ruler" strong and stout,
Some one of them would ask him,
"Does your mother know you're out?"

If, as was right and proper,
He, resentment dared to show,
(Perhaps I ought not to tell it)
They would roll him in the snow.

"You're just as mean as you can be,"
Cried the girls with angry tears,
"And we'll never speak to you again,
If we live a hundred years."

STOPS HEADACHE IN FIVE MINUTES

A Wonderful Formula Ends Aches and Pains Almost Like Magic.
Something Better and Safer!
Thousands of men and women are now stopping their aches, dizzy, splitting headaches, as well as the excruciating pains of rheumatism, neuritis, toothache, etc., with a marvelous new formula that is said to be far superior to any thing heretofore used.
It contains no opium, acetaminol, etc., and is absolutely safe and harmless. This remarkable formula, called A-VOL, is being prescribed by thousands of doctors, dentists and welfare nurses because of the quick, efficient way it relieves all types of aches and pains without depressing the heart, or causing any other harmful effects. A-VOL quickly stops the most severe pain, leaving the patient refreshed and feeling fine. Especially effective in women's period pains.
To quickly prove to yourself that this is truly a remarkable formula, just step into your nearest drug store and get a package of A-VOL for a few cents. Take a couple of tablets right there. If your pain is not gone in five minutes, the clock will return your money.

And, they might have kept their promise,
For every word was meant,
But spelling schools and moonlight,
Soon made them to relent.

For girls were girls, and boys were boys,
In "Auld Lang Syne" as now,
And Cupid was just as busy,
With his arrow and his bow.

Songo boys, of late edition,
Who need not now, "birch rule"
Of the "good old times" what think you?

When your "daddies" went to school?
But many years have intervened,
Since the scenes of which I write,
Occurred in that old school-room,
Where childhood winged its flight.

Soon, around a schoolhouse modern,
There, standing on the site,
Of the one so loved and cherished,
And o'er which I grieve to-night.

Other children will be playing,
With smiling faces fair,
On the green and in the brooklet,
With ne'er a thought of care.

On the Sandy shores of Songo,
With joyous hearts and gay,
In the rhythmic waves that ripple,
Bare-footed boys will play.

We are getting past the noon-tide,
And time is fleeting fast,
From the wheel that moves it onward,
The hand was never cast.

Soon for us will come the evening,
Then will dawn that perfect day,
When from eyes grown dim with weeping,
All tears are wiped away.

Now good night, old Songo school-
mates,
Good bye, 'till we meet again,
If I've pleased you with my rhyming,
My time was not in vain.

"Should old acquaintance be forgot,
And never brought to mind?
Should old acquaintance be forgot,
And the days of Auld Lang Syne?"

TWO-MINUTE SERMON

by REV. GEORGE HENRY

LOOK OUT!

Certain forward looking gentlemen are continually pointing out to us glimpsing pictures of the future. "Look up" they cry, "the sun is shining."
True enough. But we will do well to look around a bit and to look out at the same time. Jesus lived for his day and for his own people quite as much as for peoples of ages yet to come. Conscious of the shining sun, yet still he probed the shadows. Men sometimes put a wrong construction upon "the mark of high calling." The high calling of Christ is a call to service. With eyes fixed continually upon our own eternal destiny we are apt to miss our opportunities. While we are enjoying the sunshine we are apt to forget those who languish and sorrow in shadow land. There is much of pain and sadness in this old world, my friend. If we are among the more fortunate, let us thank God; then, let us use the means and strength that He has given us, to help others on the way.

Archangel's Watch Kept

Through the "Daisy's Eye"

The white-heath aster or Michaelmas daisy, in old fields and beside roadways, is common from Maine to Minnesota and southward. It is named for Michael, archangel of heaven, "who is like God," and is mentioned in the Bible as being in special charge of the Israelites as a nation. It is said that through the "day's eye" of this little daisy Michael, who disputed with Satan about the body of Moses and with his angels warred against the devil in upper regions, looks out from Paradise upon the ways of human beings, their troubles and joys. It was the Archangel Michael who, accompanied by a group of Cherubim, drove our father Adam and mother Eve out of the Garden of Eden. The Cherubim were mysterious composite beings, winged footstools and chariots of the Almighty; figuratively, fullness of knowledge or an influence proceeding from God and descending upon men. The Michaelmas daisy, after centuries, has tiny flowers, white with yellow disks and 15-25 rays. Stems and flower peduncles have very small, leaf-like linear leaves. Lovers sitting in Paradise on old turnstiles in the gloaming, or mossy logs by woodland roads, the "day's eye" of Michael upon them, should remember that for their sin earth's first lovers were condemned to earn their bread by the sweat of their brows.—Otis Swift in the New York World-Telegram.

Eye Care Saves Much

Bodily Nervous Energy
Six of the twelve sets of nerves in the head lead to the eyes, according to M. J. Julian of the Better Vision Institute, utilizing more of the available nervous energy than is required for any other one organ of the body. One authority has estimated that one-half of the energy required by the five senses is absorbed by the eyes alone, moving the eyelids, shifting the eye, dilating the pupil, recording the visual and color images and transmitting them to the brain. "Eyes that are out of adjustment require even more energy," says Mr. Julian. "It is even worse if one eye is normal and one subnormal, for then there is a conflict between the effectiveness of the images that are registered and the corresponding messages sent to the brain. Eyesight specialists, in normalizing sight, are in reality conserving the resources of energy of the body, balancing the budget of 'current' that the various organs require. No one has estimated the amount of energy which a pair of glasses saves in a lifetime, but it can be easily guessed from the headaches and general tiredness that weak eyes invariably lead to."

Attains All

A group of professional men had gathered in the lobby of a hotel and proceeded to make themselves known to one another. "My name is Portesque," said one, extending his hand. "I'm a painter—work in water colors chiefly." "Indeed," chimed in another, "I'm an artist, too. I work in brown." "Well, this is one," a third broke in. "I'm a sculptor. I work in stone." Then the small little fellow who had been inclining to keep apart stepped up with a smile. "Kind to make the acquaintance of you gentlemen. I live in a room on this street with you. I'm a cult professor. I work in ivory."—Paris Magazine.

Fish in Swimming Tank

It seems that the French people are not so keen about bathing use of swimming tanks to the winter months and the result is that these places are not profitable in the cold weather. In order to make use of the plant during the dull season, a Parisian pool proprietor started his swimming tank with fish and it proved a great attraction for anglers. The fishermen are charged an admission fee and are obliged to enter a limited number of fish. If they desire to go over the limit they must pay for the privilege, the charge being returned by the number of fish.

Columbus and Cannibals

Columbus and his crew never came into contact with any tribe of people whom he knew to be cannibals. The attempt to kill him was made by a tribe in San Domingo. Haiti and other West Indian islands to add him of cannibalism. The tribe known as the Caribs, who were a warlike and ferocious race, originally lived in the West Indies, but at that time were on the mainland of South America. Columbus, in his journal, wrote that the natives of the Antilles lived in great fear of the Caribs, that is, the Caribs or people of the Carib language.

Scholars Not Agreed

on Pharaoh of Exodus

The Jewish encyclopedia states that "most scholars identify with the Pharaoh of the oppression Rameses II, son of Seti, who ruled over Egypt for 67 years. He is known to have built in lower Egypt many structures of a character similar to those indicated by Exodus 1:11. . . . Merneptah II, his son, would then be the Pharaoh of the exodus. . . . Still it has been argued that under the reign of Merneptah II Egypt was too well organized to have been successful. His successor, Seti II, therefore, under whom a general administrative disintegration set in, is suggested as the ruler who was forced to acquiesce in the demands of the Hebrews." As to the time, it is stated that "The dates given in the Bible, though involved in much confusion, lend strong probability to the assumption that the exodus took place under a king of the nineteenth dynasty (about 1300-1200 B. C.). I Kings 6:1 fixes the interval between the exodus and the building of the temple at over 450 years. Rehoboam—41 years after the building of the temple—was contemporaneous with Shishak, the first king of the twenty-second dynasty (about 950 B. C.). This would give about 1470 B. C. for the exodus."

Quern Still in Use in

Ireland and Scotland

One of the earliest types of mill used for grinding corn, the quern, is still to be found in use in some of the more remote parts of Ireland and in the Hebrides and Shetlands. It is a primitive type of mill, yet ingenious in its operation. It is composed of two circular flat stones, the upper of which is drilled through the center with a funnel-shaped opening. A wooden or metal pin inserted in the center of the lower stone provides an axis about which the upper stone revolves. Set in the outer edge of the upper stone is another pin used as a handle for turning the stone. The grain to be ground is dropped with the hand down the funnel-like opening in the center, while the upper stone is turned with the other hand. The meal thus produced is coarse, but nevertheless meets the needs of those using the quern.

Her Maiden Effort

Her courtship had continued for some time. He was a young attorney striving to get into the legislature. She guilelessly (perhaps) got him to instruct her in parliamentary procedure on this particular evening he had reached the place where he was explaining how the presiding officer and the assembly when a measure was ready to be voted on. She had seemed rather preoccupied all the evening, and at this point she interrupted with, "I beg your pardon; but I really didn't get that last sentence." "Are you ready for the question?" he repeated, smiling indulgently. "Why, yes, George," she cooed, "but you might as well spring it without the preliminaries."

High Lighthouse

On a tiny island, Lohu, in the Hawaiian group, the government has the highest lighthouse service. It is on a ten foot high rock, and stands 707 feet above the Pacific ocean. Because it is difficult to climb the rock, the light, which shows ten flashes a minute, is capable of burning a whole year without attention. Twice a year it is visited by a lightship tender for installation of new tanks of gas. Ordinarily lightships are made to stand 100 or 200 feet above sea level, so they will not be obscured by low lying fog. But in Hawaii, where the trade winds cross, fog is a rarity—copper's words.

Settles Federal Claims

The United States Court of Claims was established in 1855 to adjudicate claims against the United States. It consists of five judges, a chief justice and four associates, and sits at Washington. The court considers matters placed before it and upon the first day of each regular session of congress presents the findings of the court for the year, and upon recommendation of the court congress appropriates money for the payment of the awards. It is not necessary for more than a majority of the judges to approve.

New Zealand Legends

Feature "Pelorus Jack"

There is a reference to "Pelorus Jack" in W. D. Boyce's book "Australia and New Zealand." He states that this was a 14-foot dolphin which made its home in French pass, a channel between the South Island of New Zealand and a small island off its northern coast. This channel for years had "a singular claim to distinction because through its waters ships were often piloted by Pelorus Jack, which met the ships and accompanied them through the pass, diving and plunging around their keels. Parliament passed an act (in 1904) to protect him, but Pelorus Jack has disappeared. A whaling steamer operated in the vicinity of the pass a few years ago and the dolphin was never seen again. There were many strange stories told of him; the Māoris declared that he was not less than two hundred and fifty-seven years old." Other books on New Zealand mention various Maori legends of this dolphin, which is named after Pelorus sound nearby. To the Māoris, he is a tanwhi, or ocean-god, a beneficent deity.

Detroit's Future Seen

by George Washington

Among other evidences of the foresight of George Washington, newly brought to light, is the recognition of the importance of Detroit as a waterway center in the development of the nation. As early as 1783, according to documents in the possession of the Clements library of the University of Michigan, Washington clearly foresaw and stated that Detroit—then a frontier village of a few hundred inhabitants—was "a point through which the trade of the lakes, Huron and all above it, must pass, if it centers in any state of the Union."

Since he could not have foreseen the importance of railroads, Washington concentrated his attention on waterways as a means of making the Northwest territory available and proposed a series of them to connect the Great Lakes with the Atlantic. In support of his plan he carefully computed distances from Detroit to eastern points, including Albany, Montreal, Philadelphia and Richmond.

Valuable Real Estate

The oldest part of Manhattan, often called the "cradle of New York city," is assessed for city tax purposes at $1,000,000,000, the New York Herald Tribune says. The property occupies the 600-acre tract south of a line crossing Manhattan Island from the North river at Harrison Street to the East river at James street, following along Worth street to Broadway and Leonard street, east of Broadway. Its estimated selling price is one and one-half billions of dollars.
